SCOOBY AND HIS
PALS SOLVE THE MYSTERY OF
THE PHANTOM WOLF

On safari, a boy learns
to act like a man.
Daisy's
Safari Mark I
B-B Gun teaches the same lessons.

There is no room on a big game hunt for a boy who doesn't understand safety and marksmanship. A kid has to learn fast.

Now the Daisy Safari Mark I B-B Gun can teach those same lessons.

It's not a toy. It's a B-B gun. It has big gun features, like a crossbolt safety and trigger guard cocking.

But it's a B-B gun, scaled down to your size.

And now you can learn marksmanship with the exciting Daisy B-B Target-Trap. It's a $4 value, now yours for only $1.99 when you buy any Daisy B-B Gun. Take the coupon below to your store when you buy.

For even more fun, pick up our booklet, "The Air Rifle Marksman," where you buy your Daisy. It's only 50c.

Learn the lessons of a safari, with the Safari Mark I!

Or choose from over 30 models of Daisy spring-air, CO<sub>2</sub>, and pellet guns.

Since the 1800's, American boys have learned marksmanship with a Daisy. Now it's your turn.

THE STRANGE TREES AT KRISTIANSAND

© 1972, WESTERN PUBLISHING COMPANY, INC.

The storm came up suddenly. A wind of near-hurricane force churned the North Sea into mountainous waves. Osland, the sea rover, and his crew battled mightily to keep their ship from foundering. After many hours, during which several crewmen were washed overboard, the storm died down.

Exhausted, Osland was falling asleep when he heard a cry for help. Stumbling to his feet, he saw a painted barge, its mast broken and sail dragging, helpless in the now gently rolling sea. To the prow clung a man who was badly injured.

Osland ordered his ship to swing close to the barge, and he was startled to see that it held seven beautiful girls dressed in rich garments.

"These are the seven daughters of King Eric Bloodyax," the man told Osland. "I was taking them to him in the Orkney Islands when the storm struck. Now I am dying and I cannot go on... help me!"

Osland promised to take the princesses to their father, and the girls were transferred to his ship. But instead of sailing for the Orkneys, he took them to his home—a log tower near Kristiansand.

"I will hold them for ransom," Osland told his wife, Kirstin.

Kirstin had another idea. The sons of Haldaar Redbeard of Harstad would pay much in hides, furs and bronze weapons for these girls as brides. Osland agreed to the plan, but he was afraid of the vengeance of King Eric Bloodyax.

Through the winter, Kirstin spun wedding dresses for the princesses—white shifts shot with silver and bordered in red.

The girls, aged twelve to twenty, were grief-stricken when they learned of Kirstin's plan; but when they saw the handsome sons of Haldaar Redbeard, they were filled with joy. However, there were ten sons and only seven girls; so Kirstin matched them according to age. The three young men who were left out avenged themselves by setting fire to Osland's tower on the wedding night. Everyone died, even Kirstin and Osland.

A short time later, a circle of seven tall spruce trees was discovered on a hill above the tower ruins. Their soft blue color was that of a Norwegian bride's cloak.

Through the years people built houses on the site of Osland's tower, but all of the buildings mysteriously burned to the ground. Tales were told of how, on windless nights, the seven spruce trees would twist as if in agony and bend toward each other as if they were seeking sympathy.

Undaunted by this seeming curse on the place, a man named Nils Haaverlund erected a magnificent villa there in 1890. His wife was a vicious-tempered woman who imagined she was an invalid. Since it was her money upon which they lived, her word was law.

One evening she demanded that the seven spruce trees be cut down; they made her bedroom too dark.

Nils frowned, "Move to another room," he said. "Many people have tried to cut down those trees. All met with tragic ends."

"Nonsense!" snapped his wife, and she gave orders for the trees to be chopped down the next morning.

It was the last order Madame Haaverlund ever gave.

When, on the following day, the woodsman swung his ax against the first spruce, an agonized scream came from Madame's ground-floor bedroom. He paused, then swung again. Another hair-raising cry rang out. The man rushed to the bedroom window, then froze in horror. On the bed lay Madame Haaverlund, dead from two great gashes in her side—gashes that looked like the cuts made by the ax on the tree trunk.

No one has ever tried to cut down the seven spruce trees again. They stand today, no taller and no broader than when they first appeared all those centuries ago.
